For Francis Bacon--'Revenge is a kind of wild justice'.

For Sandu Barr, it was all which remained to him in the years since his wife's enigmatic death. Drawn across cities, countries, and continents by ludic memories and quixotic chimaeras, Sandu is fired by the pursuit of what happened, why, and--above all--for those responsible. Still, he'd no real expectation of success until that evening in the industrial basin. The cryptic encounter--hard on the docks--with the figure scuttling down the ruined, derelict streets offered the first genuine opportunity in years. From this a widening gyre of gesture, absurdity, battle ballet, metaphysical elusion, and political in-fighting emerged. Detail nearly drowning sense and purpose. Helped by dream, a jade-eyed, black grimalkin of mixed purpose, a hesitant, self-righteous cabal, and his own rage he stalks a tableau of characters and elusive endgames which cross time, M-Theory, myth, folklore, eschatology, and the burdened air of revolutionary wrath and justice. Cossetting these is an exegetical, if suspicious, promise of redemption.

The Seurat Construct is Book I of 'The Burdened Air'. This is followed by The Dog Particle, Book II and conclusion of 'The Burdened Air'.
